

Queering Interventions: Gender-Based Violence Prevention with and within LGBTQ+ Communities

Program Description

This presentation will provide attendees with information about the relationship between LGBTQ+ communities and violence. The presenter will share what the current data tells us and engage attendees in a discussion about better practices to create more affirming LGBTQ+ policies and practice in anti-violence work.

Program Objectives

Upon completion of this program, participants will be able to:

- Describe the baseline information risk and protective factors in LGBTQ+ communities;
- Outline what the data tells us about better practices for prevention and response;
- Explain how individuals and agencies could use what we know to bolster their own programming.

Target Audience

This program is designed for healthcare professionals, social workers, substance use disorder professionals, psychologists, and other interested mental health or public health professionals.

Faculty

JP Przewoznik, MSW (any pronouns respectfully) is a Clinical Assistant Professor in the School of Social Work at UNC-Chapel Hill. Prior to joining the faculty in 2019, JP worked in local, state, and national training, technical assistance, and policy arenas in the areas of sexual violence prevention and LGBTQ+ health and wellness. JP uses the almost 20 years of experience they have in non-profit work, group facilitation, community organizing, and systems advocacy to support the education of the school's burgeoning social workers. JP is the recipient of the 2020 UNC-CH School of Social Work Excellence in Teaching Faculty Award and is currently serving a three-year appointment on the campus-wide Provost's Committee for LGBT Affairs. Their community engagements include serving on the Boards of Directors for the North Carolina Coalition Against Sexual Assault and Safe Schools North Carolina.
