

Sexual Violence Prevention on College Campuses

Program Description

Since the US Department of Education issued their now famous “Dear Colleague” Letter of 2011, the topic of campus sexual assault has been made it firmly into the mainstream zeitgeist. That sexual assault on campus is an urgent problem is largely agreed upon by researchers and practitioners; what is not clear is how exactly we work to prevent campus sexual assault from happening in the first place. This presentation will provide an overview of what the research tells us about campus sexual assault and what theoretical and programmatic prevention options exist for campuses to utilize.

Program Objectives

Upon completion of this program, participants will be able to:

- Explain the problem of sexual violence on college campuses, with an historic overview and understanding of the current landscape;
- Outline practices for prevention and response on college campuses, including a snapshot of programming and policy across the country.

Target Audience

This program is designed for healthcare professionals, social workers, substance use disorder professionals, psychologists, and other interested mental health or public health professionals.

Faculty

JP Przewoznik, MSW (any pronouns respectfully) is a Clinical Assistant Professor in the School of Social Work at UNC-Chapel Hill. Prior to joining the faculty in 2019, JP worked in local, state, and national training, technical assistance, and policy arenas in the areas of sexual violence prevention and LGBTQ+ health and wellness. JP uses the almost 20 years of experience they have in non-profit work, group facilitation, community organizing, and systems advocacy to support the education of the school's burgeoning social workers. JP is the recipient of the 2020 UNC-CH School of Social Work Excellence in Teaching Faculty Award and is currently serving a three-year appointment on the campus-wide Provost's Committee for LGBT Affairs. Their community engagements include serving on the Boards of Directors for the North Carolina Coalition Against Sexual Assault and Safe Schools North Carolina.
